Someone's dad passed out in the street
The wind-up key worker bees
Buzz right on by
At night he still lies
There 'cos nobody cares

Insects with briefcases ignore him Been lying here for days Not my problem, man Look man, this is New York

Now the rats are coming to feed Every night they bring more and more of their friends Immune to rat poison, totally unafraid And this is a very special treat indeed

They crawl up my pantleg / I'm too weak to move No one hears my cries as they start on my toes Their teeth are like razors as they gnaw at my hands It sure beats McDonald's so get it while it lasts

See the headline in the Post?

No one helped that old man for a week They're homeless cos they wanna be Let's talk about sports

Watch 'em tear that old building down On the way home

But when a bulldozer pops the rubble like a pimple Volcanoes of rats swarm all over us like bees
As big as a cat, not afraid to chase people
Or nibble on the wipers and vinyl roofs of cars

People are panicking, the cops have all fled A shotgun will only kill one at a time And it won't be the last time we run for our lives From those teeth sinking into our arms and legs

City fathers see a bright future ahead Where the poor no longer exist Drive the neighborhood people away from their homes Paint 'em over and quadruple the rent

Isolate the undesirables in places like Harlem Our Sowetos without walls
If they won't go away

Cops smash their heads Like they did in Tompkins Square

Those stories give me the creeps
I hope I didn't miss that last train
Some smart-ass plastered life-size pictures of rats
On the walls of the subway station
Funny joke

It's so quiet down here
It's a little too quiet down here

Who's that across the tracks Smoldering eyes are glaring up at me Inching closer and closer, almost laughing out loud The train finally comes, but it won't even stop

Not here, not tonight
I'm off in an hour, I don't wanna get involved
With some guy in a suit fighting rats off his face
Just leave 'em to the night, they'll be gone the next day
