She's catching the wind... the gentlest of breezes. It's a sensitive passage she's sailing -Through stormy straits, navigates my unfathomable failings.

She rises before me, reading me clearly. Empty nest left pressed in the pillow. She can shift, she can sway and bend like a willow.

I'm swept in the riptide. Caught in a fish trap.
Gift-wrapped in my soft self centre.
Summer sun leaves me as one who can only taste winter.
She's a good, a good God-send... she can bend like a willow.

With a fully armed angel to cover me quickly, I'm cool under enemy fire.

If I fall, she can crawl right under the wire.

When I'm caustic and cold, she might dare to be bold - ease me round to her warm way of thinking... fill me up from the cup of love that she's drinking. And I find, given time, I can bend like a willow. She bends like a willow Bends like a willow. Like a willow. Willow.
