The Death Of Queen Jane (Child No. 170)

Joan Baez

Queen Jane lay in labor For six weeks and more The women grew weary And the midwife gave o'er

King Henry, he was sent for On horse back and speed King Henry came to her In the time of her need

Oh Henry, good King Henry If that you do be Please pierce my side open And save my baby

Oh no Jane, good Queen Jane
That never could be
I'd lose my sweet flower
To save my baby

Queen Jane she turned over She fell all in a swoon Her side was pierced open And the baby was found

How bright was the morning How yellow was the moon How costly the white coat Queen Jane was wrapped in

King Henry he weeped He wrung his hands 'til they're sore The flower of England Will never be no more
