don't you just love angelina in the sun with her hair long and brown and don't you just wish you could have her she's the best looking girl in the town and you talk and you try not to stutter and you look but you try not to stare and she walks by you wish you could touch her but she don't even know that your there and don't you just love angelina i could take you home from the party you know its too cold out for walking this late and i will try to play it cool not to blow it yeah but you know that these feelings can't wait so why don't you come when i call you tell me why don't you whisper my name always acting like i got something wrong but i think now that you are to blame and don't you know that i love you angelina revolver now lies in the backseat angelina now lies in the trunk tell me why did you think you would do it when you shot down the one that you loved and you buried her deep beneath the water you buried your gun on the hill and you hope that they never will find her but you know sooner or later they will and don't you just love angelina better run past the wheat feilds and the backwoods better follow the railroad tracks and you'll take to the sea if they'll let you and you sail and you never come back better keep a sharp knife in your pocket cause you stumble through faraway lands by your heart lies a gold picture locket and a memory stained blood on your hands and don't you just love angelina no don't you just love angelina no no don't you just love angelina
