Even Then

John Michael Montgomery

My love for you has spread across My every move, my every thought Like a fire the wind has caught As I begin

To give you all of who I am Your every touch is my command When once again it seems I've loved you all I can

Even then my heart will pound So loud the world will hear the sound Of how I couldn't love you more And even then

Each night will bring another day Another chance for me to say Your arms are all I'm livin' for And lovin' in

And even then the farthest star Will find us anywhere we are I will love you till the end And even then

I won't know how to tell you this But I will say with every kiss No man has ever loved like this Or will again

And when your auburn hair turns gray And there are lines across your face That map each moment and each place Our love has been

Even then my heart will pound So loud the world will hear the sound Of how I couldn't love you more And even then

Each night will bring another day Another chance for me to say Your arms are all I'm livin' for And lovin' in

And even then the farthest star Will find us anywhere we are I will love you till the end And even then

Yes, I will love you till the end And even then