

Beyond the Blue

Josh Garrels

Stand on the shores of a site unseen The substance of this dwells in me Cause my natural eyes only go skin deep But the eye's of my heart anchor the sea Plumbing the depths to the place in between The tangible world and the land of a dreams Because everything ain't quite it seems There's more beneath the appearance of things A beggar could be king within the shadows, Of a wing

And wisdom will honor everyone who will learn To listen, to love, and to pray and discern And to do the right thing even when it burns And to live in the light through treacherous turns A man is weak, but the spirit yearns To keep on course from the bow to the stern And throw overboard every selfish concern That tries to work for what can't be earned Sometimes the only way to return is to go, Where the winds will take you

And to let go, of all, you cannot hold onto For the hope, beyond, the blue

Yellow and gold as the new day dawns Like a virgin unveiled who waited so long To dance and rejoice and sing her song And rest in the arms of a love so strong No one comes unless they're drawn By the voice of desire that leads em' along To the redemption of what went wrong By the blood that covers the innocent one No more separation Between us.

So lift your voice just one more time If there's any hope may it be a sign That everything was made to shine Despite what you can see So take this bread and drink this wine And hide your spirit within the vine Where all things will work by a good design For those who will believe

And let go, of all, we cannot hold onto For the hope, beyond, the blue

Said I let go, of all, I could not hold onto For the hope, I have, in you