Different Time, Different Place

Julia Fordham

We're all walking a fine line and I'm Walking towards you, and I
Hope that I'm right in thinking, I'll never walk alone
I'm always running from something
Now I'm running towards you
It may not be the right thing, but it's what I want to do

And in a different time, in a different place I could see myself with you And in a different time and a different place I believe you could see yourself too

I'll be biding my time, and I'll be Watching my step, 'cause I don't want to
Be starting something here that I might live to regret
'cause I have learnt my lesson
And I have learnt it well
There are some things in this life best left for time to tell

In a different time, in a different place I could see myself with you And in a different time and a different place I believe you could see yourself too In a different time, in a different place

I believe I could safely lay my life down in your hands I believe that's what I'd do if you gave me half the chance Oh I believe, oh I believe

In a different time, in a different place I could see myself with you And in a different time and a different place I believe you could see yourself there too

In a different time, in a different place I could see myself with you And in a different time and a different place Oh I believe you could see yourself there too

Different time, different place
