Your Silhouette

Katherine Jenkins

Something in the way you held me Heaven in the words you said Tonight I'm looking at the open window Liyng in our empty bed

I try in vain to remember So afraid to forget How light the snow was falling last December On your silhouette

Clinging to a memory of you Lying by a winter's flame The night I told you a was born to love you And how I'd never be the same

For as long as I'm living I'll will always regret How all the tme I never took a picture Of your silhouette

I used to close my eyes And only see your face But time was made to fly And carry you away

How light the snow was falling last December On your silhouette

Oh, and maybe if I try to listen I can hear you call my name From out across the great and mighty distance Something like an open sea

Helping me to remember So afraid to forget How light the snow was falling last December On your silhouette
