Country Sky Glow

Kevin Devine

You carry the beach in your way too short hair That you shaved off last week Cause you freaked and got scared That when it's longer, you remind me of her

So you offered it up
With what passed for authority
A strict sort of challenge
That you directed straight at me
You said "forget her, I don't care what you two were"

So it's a trick on your ego A two-step off tempo A solid gold bracelet Under lights in a window In some shopping mall Where I never go

You play coy and count tiles
Drag your toes through the water
Raise your eyes, bite your lip
And my mind's in the gutter
You move at me and take my face in your hands

I feel light bulbs explode
And a fire crack thunder sends
The slow seismic shift
The sprawling cloud cover
But when we're finished
I feel awful again

So it's the same sorry story Just the cast changes nightly It skips like a record But it glows like a movie You're the country sky That I never see

Shake in your voice Makes me feel empty and ugly All scattered anger like a windstorm Howling violently And I wanna fade out And wake up somewhere else Where no face is familiar And I'm left by myself To keep plugging away On my own wasted time To eat badly and spend all my money and write To not feel too guilty To be tired at night Since I'm not fixing things here I'll leave them behind So you make your decision Cause I'm through making mine

Now I walk where the street

Swallows light like it's water
I see the slant of your smirk
On every kid at the corner
But if you called
I'd never know what to say
So I just hope you never will Cause things are easier that way
