

Just Suppose

Kris Kristofferson

You're going back now and I guess you think she's waiting
'Cause she's waited there so many times before
I suppose that you suppose that she's still crying
Like the way she was when you walked out that door

And I imagine you intend to say you're sorry
For the sorry things you always seem to do
Yes I guess you feel ashamed and I can't really say I blame you
I suppose I'd feel the same if I were you

You took your time to get your mind together
And gave her time to find somebody else
But if she's not true, Lord, who are you to blame her
You know you've been untrue a time or two yourself

And I expect you to expect me to feel guilty
For not giving back the love you threw away
But just suppose you really love her now like I do
What do you suppose you'd do if you were me