

Interlude

Laleh

Samuel woke up from his sleep one night by a vision from God.
And he felt an urge to share his vision with the rest of the world.

And as many men before him, he was convinced that the truth should be spread around the world by him.

So he said goodbye to his family and his home in the forest, for one in the city.

His sister was worried for the disappointments he might face

And that he would grow sharp edges on his heart

And cause more scatteredness than peace around him.

But she did love him.

And to soften his heart she wrote him a letter, saying:

"Oh my tangerine don't compare the worst in them, with the best in you.

Only love can change us, brother Samuel"

The city is crowded and full of distractions,

The people look proud but they cry for affection.

The city is crowded and full of distractions,

The people look proud but they cry for affection.