

In the silent deep water of the sea
Tells a story of an endless tragedy
Sedna, the goddess of marine creatures
She mastered depths and gales

Once upon a time when she was a young girl
She was as beautiful as a flourishing rose
But she rejected all proposals
From contender, who wanted to marry her

Her wrath coloured her soul
Darker as her hair
Victim of her conceitedness
And of her pretension
Now she must dwell forever
At the bottom of the abyssal ocean

Sedna's father compelled her
To marry a cryptic hunter, dressed in furs
His face was hidden in shades
Nobody knew his true identity

Her wrath coloured her soul
Darker as her hair
Victim of her conceitedness
And of her pretension
Now she must dwell forever
At the bottom of the abyssal ocean

The hunter revealed himself a raven
She cried into the wind

Sedna's father rescued his daughter
But the raven attacked their boat

For fear of death, the father threw Sedna off the boat
She clung her hands on the boarder
But he smashed her frozen hands
Her fingers sank and transmuted to seals and whales
Her will to live waned and she drifted to the ground
That's how she became the goddess of seas

Her wrath coloured her soul
Darker as her hair
Victim of her conceitedness
And of her pretension
Now she must dwell forever
At the bottom of the abyssal ocean
