

The Maharaja

Lisa Gerrard

When the Maharaja comes, he brings the sun.
He draws upon the moon and all the flowers bloom.
There he whispers onto the air and brings a grace pure and fair,
Evoking with his inner word he makes a pathway for the birds.
And nature's voice will sing to him and lift his heart
upon its wing,
To palaces of light and gold,
The breath of life will there unfold.

And God will bless his gentle hand for walking lightly on the land,
And there are borne the sacred things,
That can't be touched or bound by strings,
A soil unbruised by human pain,
He brings the rain.
And there he's washed by heaven's tears,
And gone are all his deepest fears,
And trust will come, within a new borne son