Mother

Low

When you became my mother, there was time You thought I'd be a daughter, but didn't mind And as the world began to measure, and define We had time We had time

You gave me light and language, and a name
You held me to the fire, to the flame
Now if I could tell the future, all the same
Why would I
We have time

Deep beneath the surface of the earth So many bodies waiting for the word When every child and mother will return Forever We'll have time
