Still June

Maia Hirasawa

I looked up into the sky I thought I catched your eye You reminded me There's nothing to see But maybe you are wrong Baby, I could come along That would be quite fair When you're never here

And it should, it should be winter now But my mind is still june And you should, you should Have given me your wings by now So I could catch your eye

And I am not alone I'm here with someone She never got the chance And I hate myself for that Cause my heart stopped to But some just for a while Should I be thankful? no I hate you for that

It should, it should be winter now But my mind's still june And you should, you should Have given me your wings by now So I could catch your eye

It should, It should be winter now But my mind still june And you should, you should Have given me wings by now So I could catch your eye So I could catch your eye