Starless Summer Sky

Marshall Crenshaw

The heat of the day begins to die The faintest breeze comes drifting by And you and I we watch the clouds roll by All alone beneath the starless summer sky

Each night we talk about the day When we run out of things to say We sit and gaze into each other's eyes So alone beneath the starless summer sky

Sometimes the best words are left unspoken Sometimes the best words are left unsaid Sometimes it's nobody else's business Well together, tonight, you know that it's right

We sit and gaze into each other's eyes And we kiss beneath the starless summer skies Sometimes the best words are left unspoken Sometimes the best words are left unsaid Sometimes it's nobody else's business

Well together, tonight, you know that it's right The heat of the day begins to die The faintest breeze comes drifting by

And you and I we watch the clouds roll by All alone beneath the starless summer sky 'neath the starless summer sky...