The Cowboy In The Continental Suit

Marty Robbins

Well, he walks out in the arena All dressed up to the brim Said he'd just came down from a place Called "Highland Rim" Well, he said he came to ride the horse The one they call "The Brute" But he didn't look like a cowboy In his Continental Suit

We snickered at the way he dressed But he never said a word He walks on by the rest of us As if he hadn't heard A thousand bucks went to the man Who could ride this wild cayuse A meaner horse was never born Than the one they called "The Brute"

The horse that he was looking for Was in chute number eight He walked up very slowly Put his hand upon the gate We knew he was a thoroughbred When he pulled his sack of "Dukes" From the inside pocket Of his Continental Suit

Well, he rolled hisself a "Corley" And he lit it standing there Blew himself a smoke ring And he watched it disappear We thought he must be crazy When he opened up the gate Standing just inside was Fifeteen hundred pounds of hate

The Buckskin tried to run him down But the stranger was too quick He stepped aside and threw his arms Around the horse's neck And pulled himself up on the back Of the horse they called "The Brute" Sit like he was born there In his Continental Suit

"The Brute's" hind-end was in the air His front end on the ground Kickin' and a-squealin', tryin' to Shake this stranger down But the stranger didn't give an inch He came to ride "The Brute" And he came to ride the Buckskin In a Continental Suit

Well, I turned around to look at Jim And he was watchin' me He said, "I don't believe The crazy things I think I see But I think I see the outlaw The one they call "The Brute" Ridden by a cowboy In a Continental Suit"

"The Brute" came to a stand-still Ashamed that he'd been rode By a city cowboy in Some Continental clothes The stranger took his money And we don't know where he went We don't know where he came from And we haven't seen him since

The moral of this story: Never judge by what they wear Underneath some ragged clothes Could be a millionaire Everybody listen Don't be fooled by this galoot This sure-'nough bronc buster In a Continental Suit
