Emerald

Mastodon

Down from the glen came the marching men With their shields and their swords To fight the fight they believed to be right Overthrow the overlords

To the town where there was plenty They brought plunder, swords and flame When they left the town was empty Children would never play again

From their graves I heard the fallen Above the battle cry By that bridge near the border There were many more to die

Then onward over the mountain And outward towards the sea They had come to claim the Emerald Without it they could not leave