

Patiently Waiting

Minus the Bear

she woke up on a train a train moving through a mountain range and she's still silently watching trees falling east, she's thinking home is just a hang up when nothing's easy

last night, hotel bar
you lost track of time emptying glasses
then you turned your head as he walked through the door he found your gaze but you made him yours did you know you could take a man so easily? for what it's worth

move, baby, move
your life is falling on you morning came and saw you alone he had turned into a note:

"thanks girl, next time in my town just pick up the phone" it found the floor
you found you weren't at home it was a night
just like any other night or someone, somewhere

move, baby, move
your life is falling on you go back to sleep for a little longer you got the best of me your clothes have been patiently waiting go put them back on it wasn't so wrong

move, baby, move
your life is falling on you