

It's not reassuring falling asleep
With so much on your mind
And waking up with nothing but loneliness
It's getting harder to recognise my own face
When it changes everyday
Greier than the last hands in pockets
Dead moonlit streets salt stained eyes
Alone times I hate head in hands
Once again summer came and so did we
I don't think we were ever meant to be
It's never been a part of my life, especially yours
My sky came crashing down
When you said goodbye
The skies turned grey for the world to fear
This room has never been so silent
Since we both shed our skin
A ripped out page that no one read
With all the words
I wish I said blinded by the traffic
That passes me by in the darkest nights
You caught my eye tonight
I scream for violence. for you
