

Changes

Nneka

Everything changes,
Remember when humans had to live in cages
And now we own our own stages
Time, yes age turns our pages
Looking out of my window, chilling warm relaxing my speed
Watching the people right back down on the streets
Asking myself how I feel as I see d living passing me
Everybody in his own but on the whole Life is still the same
Happy Family a boy loves a girl a mother breastfeeding her child
A taxi driver has just lost his job
And still it is not a matter of this world being
People manifest within themselves

Everything changes,
Remember when humans had to live in cages
And now we own our own stages
Time, yes age turns our pages

A mother gives birth to her baby,
In that moment she feels it isn't her one and only property
She'd hold on it
She'll do anything to protect it from insecurity
Just like seeds develop into flowers
And children develop into adults
Love can turn into hate and the truth u see could be deceit
Consequences do not arise without a cause
Causes could make u win or loose

What u make outta it is what u become
Some happy some are lonesome
Changes, changes always comes
