

Seas Too Far to Reach

Okkervil River

The ladies in my dream- so obliging.
They come on down to do the things I need.
Whether skies are calm or cut apart by lightning,
They're always there to minister to me.

And at break of dawn, they're sweetly shining.
Or at quiet of midnight, cold and dim,
They say "don't harm him."
And when I wake just as their eyes are crying,
I see that bed and I just want to climb back in.

But let's gather up your friends and drive up to that country i nn.
We can stay there, feeling water warmly wash across our skin,
Giving back all of our tears so that we can cry them again.

You want to tell your dad you can't believe he's dying,
But let's just walk on down the hall and shut our mouths.
The AM radio is broken down and crying
As on this hour drive we're silent to ourselves.

Let's go back up to your house, and take our clothes off.
And just push and pull ourselves until we're deep inside of sle ep.
And with your body next to me, its sleepy sighing
Sounds like waves upon a sea too far to reach.
But I'll gather up my men and try to sail on it again,
And we'll walk and quietly talk all through the country of your skin,
Made up of pieces of the places that you've dreamed and that yo u've been.
And we will sleep outside in tents upon this unfamiliar land,
And in the morning we'll awake, yeah, as a foreign dawning brea ks,
My men and I will all awake. Let's try again.
