Amoureuse

Olivia Newton-John

Strands of light on our bedroom floor Change the night through an open door I'm awake but this is not my home For the first time I'm not alone Reaching out I touch another's skin Breathing out as he's breathing in Deep inside I feel my soul aflame Can my life ever be the same

I should have told him That I'd do anything if I could hold him For just another day, for just another day His love is something I will not forget When I am far away, when I am far away I feel the rainfall of another planet Another planet

Close together in the afterglow I remember how his loving flowed Turned the key into another world Made a woman of a simple girl Daylight comes as we both know it must Soon my fantasy will turn to dust But I would give him anything he asked If my first love could be my last

I should have told him That I'd do anything if I could hold him For just another day, for just another day His love is something I will not regret When I am far away, when I am far away I feel the rainfall of another planet Another planet
