

The last light of the moon

Olympos Mons

She left her father's castle gate behind
Her feet barely touching the ground

Take me away
This time I'll stay
For good

That's what she said
I promise and swear
To you

Ahead were days of music, dance and wine
We were painting visions more and more divine

At the end of the day
When the world turned to grey
I sang

The rain drummed on hard
While invisible bells
Still rang

When the darkness eats the last
Light of the moon
We're two lovers at a secret rendezvous

Darkness eats the last
Light of the moon
Lovers at a secret rendezvous

Her father saddled up his fastest horse
Searched the valley all over banging on doors

Tell me the truth
And I shall spare you
He said

That bastard will die,
Before dawn they will hang
Him dead

When the darkness eats the last
Light of the moon
We're two lovers at a secret rendezvous

Darkness eats the last
Light of the moon
Lovers at a secret rendezvous