The Raven

Omnia

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered weak and weary, Over many a qu aint and curious volume of forgotten lore, While I nodded, nearly napping, s uddenly there came a tapping, As of some one gently rapping, tapping at my c hamber door. "'Tis some visitor," I muttered, "tapping at my chamber door Only this, and nothing more." Ah, distinctly I remember it was in the bleak December, And each separate dy ing ember wrought its ghost upon the floor. Eagerly I wished the morrow; vainly I had sought to borrow From my books surcease of sorrow sorrow for the lost Lenore For the rare and radiant maiden whom the angels named Lenore Nameless here forevermore. And the silken sad uncertain rustling of each purple curtain Thrilled me filled me with fantastic terrors never felt before; Presently, to still the beating of my heart, I stood repeating "'Tis some visitor entreating entranc e at my chamber door Some late visitor entreating entrance at my chamber door; Merely this, and nothing more," Out into that darkness peering, long I stood there wondering, fearing, Doubt ing, dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream before But the silence wa s unbroken, and the stillness gave no token, And the only word there spoken was the whispered word, "Lenore!" This I whispered, and an echo murmured bac k the word, "Lenore!" Merely this and nothing more.

Back into the chamber turning, all my soul within me burning, Soon again I h eard a tapping somewhat louder than before. "Surely," said I, "surely that i s something at my window lattice; Let me see then, what thereat is, and this mystery explore Let my heart be still a moment and this mystery explore; 'Tis the wind and nothing more!"

Open wide I flung the shutter, when, with many a flirt and flutter, In there stepped a stately raven of the saintly days of yore. Not the least obeisanc e made he; not a minute stopped or stayed he; But, with mien of lord or lady , perched above my chamber door

Perched upon a bust of arice just above my chamber door

Perched, and sat, and nothing more.

Soon that ebony bird beguiling my sad fancy into smiling, By the grave and s tern decorum of the countenance it wore, "Though thy crest be shorn and shav en, thou," I said, "art sure no craven. Ghastly grim and ancient raven wande ring on the nightly shore

Tell me what thy lordly name is on this Night's Plutonian shore!" Quoth the raven, "Nevermore."

Now the raven, sitting lonely on that placid bust, spoke only, That one word , as if his soul in that one word he did outpour. Nothing further then he ut tered not a feather then he fluttered

Till I scarcely more than muttered "Other friends have gone before

On the morrow will he leave me, as my hopes have flown before." Quoth the r aven, "Nevermore."

Then, methought, the air grew denser, perfumed by an unseen censer Swung by Seraphim whose foot-falls tinkled on the tufted floor. Once more, on the vel vet sinking, I betook myself to linking Fancy unto fancy, thinking what this ominous bird of yore

What this grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt, and ominous bird of yore Meant in croaking "Nevermore."

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil!

prophet still, if bird or devil!

Whether tempter sent, or whether tempest tossed thee here ashore, Desolate yet all undaunted, on this desert isle enchanted

On this home by horror haunted

tell me truly, I implore

Is there is there balm in Gilead?

tell me

tell me, I implore!" Quoth the raven, "Nevermore."

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil!

prophet still, if bird or devil! By that Heaven streched above us

by that God we both adore

Tell this soul with sorrow laden if, within the distant Aidenn, It shall cl asp a sainted maiden whom the angels named Lenore Clasp a rare and radiant maiden, whom the angels named Lenore?" Quoth the r aven, "Nevermore."

"Be that word our sign in parting, bird or fiend!" I shrieked upstarting

"Get thee back into the tempest of the Night's Plutonian shore! Leave no bl ack plume as a token of that lie thy soul hath spoken! Leave my loneliness u nbroken!

quit the bust above my door! Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy f orm from off my door!" Quoth the raven, "Nevermore."

Now the raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting On the pal lid bust of arice just above my chamber door; And his eyes have all the seem ing of a demon's that is dreaming, And the lamp-light o'er him streaming thr ows his shadow on the floor; And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor Will be lifted nevermore!

-