

Call That A Conversation?

Peter Hammill

Oh, spit it out, there's no way we'll see eye to eye - my simple truth is your warped confusion; as off different planets we spin eccentric jive.

I don't remember what I said I don't think you do either.

Slippery of tongue though you claim my speech may be all of the words you've been putting in my mouth just flatter to deceive.

I never said the half of that you're utterly mistaken call that a conversation?

Yeah, you said it, all my meaning, quite misread it... this conversation let's forget it now.

I can't believe what you just said call this a conversation?

Let's call it quits, let's just say it's a measure of the distance between our worlds.

I don't remember what I said, I don't think you do either; you make what you will of meaning - call that a conversation?

More likely just the space between words when the meanings have all changed.
