Why wait for life to happen, when right before our eyes blind f ate unwraps its patterns? I just said "See you soon". My piano was in tune when you walked out of the room. It felt like any n ormal Friday.

At concert pitch, 440 the pressure's many tons; the weight of l ife befalls me. I wish I could pretend my piano's on the mend. You treated it like a friend, left it to settle down over the w eekend.

You've got a ticket on the terraces for the game on Saturday and afterwards you might go for a beer. On Sunday afternoon you'l take the family to the park and later, when it's getting dark you'll say "We've still got that old spark", you'll say "Oh, a ren't we just so lucky to be here...."

So stupid and so senseless... Sometimes we're pulled up short, quite shockingly defenceless. I don't know what to do: my pian o's out of tune... it's not as if I can assume that it's ever going to get any better now.

A liquid lunch appointment when the working week is done, there 's time for one more just before he goes. A quick glance at the watch and now it's time to head for home. And so it's goodbye to the ladies, grabs the keys to his Mercedes, thinking "Maybe I should get a cab....". But no.

Blind drunk, he met you head on. On a normal Friday afternoon.
