

Nothing Comes

Peter Hammill

Consternation out of the box as the conversation runs onto the rocks; in full expectation nothing comes as a shock.

You remind me of the girlfriend I never had: never fitted the equation, I was never quite one of the lads. Still I remember that my feelings were always touch and go once I thought I knew all that, now I just don't know.

I remember that my feelings were always touch and go once I thought I knew it all, now I just don't know.