

I saw a plane spiraling toward a city I knew was already dead.
So I watched the flames rip the screams out of those heads, boiling and bubbling the way I used to imagine. A volcano bleeding in streams through empty houses until everyone was still and turned all life into stone, where statues were eventually covered by snow.