A Toast To Those Who Are Gone

Phil Ochs

Many's the hour I've lain by my window and thought of the people who carried the burden Who marched in the strange fields in search of an answer And ended their journeys an unwilling hero

So here's a song to those who are gone with never a reason why And a toast of the wine at the end of the line And a toll of the bell for the next one to die

Back in the coal fields of old Harlan county Some talked of the union, some talked of good wages And they lined them up in the dark of the forests And shot them down without asking no questions

So here's a song to those who are gone with never a reason why And a toast of the wine to the end of the line And a toll of the bell for the next one to die

And over the ocean, to the red Spanish soil
Came the lincoln brigade with their dreams
But they fell in the fire of germany's bombing
And they fell 'cause no one would hear their sad warning

So here's a song to those who are gone with never a reason why And a toast of the wine at the end of the line And a toll of the bell for the next one to die In old Alabama, in old Mississippi Two states of the union so often found guilty They came on the buses, they came on the marches And they lay in the jails or they fell by the highway

So here's a song to those who are gone with never a reason why And a toast of the wine at the end of the line And a toll of the bell for the next one to die

The state it was texas, the town it was Dallas
In the flash of a rifle a life was soon over
And nobody thought of the past million murders
And the long list of irony had found a new champion

So here's a song to those who are gone with never a reason why And a toast of the wine at the end of the line And a toll of the bell for the next one to die
