Stone Mirrors

Remembrance

A storm of gray ashes lashes my face
I watch the sky unreal and pale
I witness the dance of clouds
Until the tide breaks against the rock
Waking up the silence's reign

Where I stand, the skin of the earth Rests now of sand and stone

When the waters turn our memories to stones Where I dance is where we will die The black ashes take me to a timeless sleep In which I fall, like you will too The springs melt in the beat Obsidian walls of larva

Where I stand, we become rust An empty shell, dying on the seaside We are this desolated show This absence of colour

My eyes are veiled by the dust, thick and heavy Stone-faced gaze of the mountain Watching me fight my way Through the looming stones And I run...

I run the disembodied woods, the ash coated landscapes
They are waiting to take me, but the gray mist will pretend th at here,

I never was...