Seven sailors from the north Set their sails for the isle of Rott Then their heading turns southwest For adventure and conquest

Seven sailors head southwest as the wind fills their sails On a journey across the North Sea for adventure and conquest

And the sirens sing from every shear as the northern seamen are drawing near How they sing
How they bring the North men closer in They approach the ship
Clinging on to its rim

The sirens cling on to their ship
The sailors seem to lose their grip
Enchanted by the sirens song
Mesmerized they go along

Seven sirens of North Sea put the seamen to their rest Ended their journey across the North Sea for adventure and conquest

And the sirens sang from every shear as the Northern seamen were drawing near How they sang, how they clang on to the drowning men
The seven sailors will never return again.

Their ship went down

East of the United Kingdom

Now their seven widows weep

The seamen veiled in endless sleep

Come sleep with me, I'll set you free come dream with me at the bottom of the North Sea.
