

My Daughter

Sophie Zelmani

I'm alright but I have to tell my daughter She's the one who sees it everyday

I ain't crying but I have to comfort my daughter She seems to be feeling the pain of mine

While I'm thinking how to explain to my daughter why nothing will be the same from now on another failure of the mother given the child another lesson in being strong

I'll might be alone but I have to show my daughter that it's nothing that's scaring me

She seems so confused of the new face of her mother I have to tell my daughter she must always trust in me