

Truth

Staple

Absolute truth, absolute reality,
Its those things that don't change,
Those things that don't fade away,
No matter how much you don't believe them,
No matter how hard you try to wish them away.
For there is nothing in this life that takes
More strength, more courage,
Than to accept the truth in life that we hate.

There's no place to hide, from all the truth inside...
There's no place to hide, from all the truth inside...

Instead, it is often shoved down inside,
Corralled in some unvisited chamber of the soul
Where it laughs mockingly at you
Every time you look it's direction.
Its the thing that torments you inside,
The thing that keeps peace at a distance
Despite the repeated attempts you've made
To disassociate yourself from it's existence.

There's no place to hide, from all the truth inside...
There's no place to hide, from all the truth inside...
From all the fear that's in your life,
From all the truth that you deny.
There's no place to hide, from all the truth inside...

Does anyone have the strength it takes
To face their greatest fears in life?
Does anyone have the courage, the boldness,
To confront and reckon with the truth that haunts their souls?
Because sooner or later one must realize that all they can do is stare at Almighty God in the face and accept the facts of life set before them for the way they are, not for the way they are desired to be.
