Open Your Eyes

Steven Delopoulos

She brushes through her hair And draws another line Scuffles through her clothes And asks me for the time The sky is getting gray Her hands are getting cold

Take me through the wind Captured in the woods Silenced in the glaze I never understood I play my music well You draw up your designs

Open your eyes, child Don't let it linger on Open your eyes, child Don't let it linger on

We weren't very close
But brothers we became
He opened up the sky
Then faded with the rain
He left here all too soon, but visits in the well

Ruins of the land, ruins of the light, Take me through the stream Across the ancient night

Highways being bought Children being sold

Nothing left but fear
Let's wash it white as snow
You can take the bed, I'll keep my radio
Nothing left to say
I guess its time to go
