The River Song

Still Remains

I watched the sunset From the east side of the river When I was alive and I could feel its water Out of the late evening sky I pull to this place Where I could remember The river's deep brown bleeding eyes

It pulled me in by the ankles My senses all have left Then I heard you calling my name As it asked me to come

Come down to the water baby Bring all of your lies Come down and bring everything That you've got to disguise

I missed the sunrise In the stillness of the morning Submerged by the one who Kept me to these shores I call to the brightest of angles To save me from this scene But he can't reach me in time to save me The water pulls beneath

Come down to the water baby Bring all of your lies Come down and bring everything That you got to disguise Come down to the water baby Bring what you believe Just be sure you know that this Is where you cease to be
