Love Will Save You

Love will save you when the ocean splits itself in two Love will save you when the cold wind blows right through you Love will save you when the poison eats the precious air And love will save you from the snake that crawls around down t here But it won't save me Love will save you from the evil and the greed of ignorant men And love will save you from the guilt you feel when you betray your only friend Love will save you from yourself when you lose control And love will save you from all the lies your lover ever told y ou But it won't save me Love will save you from the truth when you think you're free

Love will save you from the cold light of boring reality Love will save you from the corruption of your lazy-minded soul And love will save you from your selfish and distorted goals But it won't save me

Love will save you from the black night and the lightning and t he ghost Love will save you from your misery, then tie you to the bloody post Love will save you from the hands that pull you down beneath th e sea Love may save all you people, but it will never, never save me No, it won't save me

Swans