

Sunset, 1989

Swimming with Dolphins

You never heard me knocking on the door.
I found you balled up on your bathroom floor
You told me everything in your defense
And never understood the consequence

I won't console, when you have control,
Every time's the last time,
But I know you'll go and do it again.
Yeah, you'll do it again.

There was a halo resting above your head,
Then it slid down around your neck,
And I bet you thought I'd never find out,
Cuz you think you're so clever.

So, now we're all grown up and settled down
And you're the only one that's livin' in this ghost town
Try to keep in touch; at least pretend.
I know we'll always be fair-weather friends, 'til the end

If there's a cause, it's already lost.
Cuz I tried the last and you tossed me aside again,
But, it won't happen again...

There was a halo resting above your head,
Then it slid down around your neck,
And I bet you thought I'd never find out,
Cuz you think you're so clever.