

The Middle Goes Down

The Black Dahlia Murder

Cold winter cuts - a heart that couldn't heal destroyed by it's own stupidity a frozen smile - cracks backing frigid lies I shelter beneath a veil of happiness - a delicate facade and snow falls as to bury what we had everything we left behind although your loving eyes - have left my gaze forever they've been captured in my sleep - although this vacant heart can't go on any longer - I feel your soft breath in my dreams but it shall not be - I cannot shake these feelings I can't renounce - this love for you is all I know I am controlled by sorrow - my hope forever lost bested by my weakness - will the spring's warmth never come?
And the snow still heaping on this broken back I am lost within its persistence you took the meaning from this withered soul I have no strength without your touch and so it was - and can never be again and so it was - and will never ever be again.
Lost - this love for you is all I know.
Weakness - will the spring's warmth never come?
A little child crying - from the bunk below I still love you - I can't cut that tie from my life love born in regret? Was our blight carved into stone?
The stone that lines my heart - I wish I never loved you cold sweat and eaten nails - I did this all for you.
A broken heart - a clenched fist full of hair - I did this all for you and any other embrace - will just turn into shit in the shadow of our former love I'd trade a bloody wrist - to live forever in those nights but the deed hath still been done
