We both liked corn dogs at the start
We once shared pastries from the cart
I know that low cholesterol is good for my heart
But these fights over what to eat are tearin' us apart
When we were young we shared a common tongue
We ate and ate and ate and never gained a bit of weight
But the years have changed our attitudes bout what is fit to eat

You've become a lacto-vegetarian and I'm still into red meat
We both liked corn dogs at the start
We once shared pastries from the cart
I know that low cholesterol is good for my heart
But these fights over what to eat are tearin' us apart
I know you feel that sodium will be the death of me
And caffeine is poison...and it's in coffee and in tea
But the birdseed that you'd have me eat would make breakfast a bore

And please don't tape those calorie charts on every cupboard do or

We once ate ice cream and French fries

Now you say that every bit of fat goes straight to your thighs

If you would just enjoy food I'd love you at any size

Come share some cake with me, you're still skinny...in my eyes

Our love could overcome this if only we would try

I'd let you be macrobiotic if you'd let me have some pie

I'd even give up bedtime snacks and take up exercise

If you would be more flexible and try to compromise

We both liked corn dogs at the start

We once shared pastries from the cart

I know that low cholesterol is good for my heart

But these fights over what to eat are tearin' us apart
