

She'll Never Know

The High Court

She tied the rope and threw her stone, she never held back from letting go.
She took her time and borrowed mine, never heard of taking it slow.
She's obsessing of dressing up in her favorite attire.
Keep on lining her eyes, adding fuel to the fire.
But late at night when it's down to the wire, she starts to hate on herself.
Something changes inside her.

And down she goes, we'll need a haven for this mental case cause she's beautiful and she'll never even know.

All of her friends say she's so pretty.
She says, "Everybody lies."
It's hard to gain confidence from pity.
So don't try.
Things seem different when you're out all alone, and your thoughts are your own.
And time will always pass her by, but she'll fight and she'll cry and she'll always try.

And down she goes, we'll need a haven for this mental case cause she's beautiful and she'll never even know.