The Material

My eyes are still burning from such sunny days
When you came to paint all of my dark skies away
Who would choose between two shades of gray
In a world, in a world so fast my heart stops beating?

I try to wrap my head around a world so big, when we've got just one life, just one life to live
How can my voice sound above all the lies?
We're silenced by the masses, but who are we if we don't try?

Give me a reason to believe this life is more than what it seems
Give me a reason to believe you're all I need

Trying to decide just where my loyalties lie
When our heads are filled with so much useless pride Children's cries drowned out as we feed our greed
With no thought to the future, will we ever take a chance on peace?

Give me a reason to believe this life is more than what
it seems
Give me a reason to believe you're all I need

And you're already gone, and I've been here too long
And I see that it's all about to change Well you've come and gone and it seems so long please someone tell me that I am strong
It's all about to change
And you were here all this time
But I was blind without a chance to make it right
It's all about to change.

Give me a reason to believe you're all I need

You are my reason
