

Honey Won't You Let Me In

The Tallest Man on Earth

Now the snow will fall
And the lovers call
Will be drenched out by the shattering of birds
As the season shifts
Lonely minds will drift
On the ocean in a buildup of its roar
As I knock your door
From inside once more
How I wish a soothing breeze would let me in Shake my tambourine
At your glowing dreams
So honey wont you let me in

As we cease to know
Where our feet will go
We wont see the ribbons tied up in the pine
Branches will untie
Every mumbling lie
Every frayed word in your lullabye is heard
Oh when I catch the force
Of our first divorce
How I wish the turning sunset could record
Blow my engine steam
At your glowing dreams
So honey wont you let me in

Now the dust will rise
Dress the open skies
Just a gallery of words we've used too much
It's a feather's weight
But what if it's too late
To be building up on muscles in the draft
Put me on the morning ship
And I will take the trip
To return with all the treasures of the past
It will always seem
Like a glowing dream
So honey wont you let me in
I said honey wont you let me in
