

The River

The Verve Pipe

She fell in love with a lover boy in the old days I would walk alone any other day not disturbing while the others roamed

And I listened to her song but would walk on the other side we'd be lonely, blue and lonely

Then she fell in love with another one I was older now, and followed a path she had learned to be cool, to be caring and I thought I should say it's too much just to be but not enough for the life of me to be lonely, blue and lonely

That's when the river ran dry that's when the river was all but a spill
that's when the river ran dry
every soul on the shore without sail, without will

She said her saviour was soon to come from a long way, to bring back the girl he once knew to be true and all loving in the very best ways

that's when the river ran dry
without sail, without will

If time were a second if life were a moment that once stood still I'd leave it untattered, untouched, until

But it's too much just to be

any other day not disturbing

and I knew it before, and I do know it still
