I saw you walking Only yesterday When I ran to catch you You disappeared And the street was gray

The candle died Now you are gone For the flame was too bright Now you are gone

I heard you laughing
With your laugh of gold
When I called out to you
Silence returned
And the air was cold

The castle fell Now you are gone

No more rings the bell Now you are gone I found a letter On the day it rained When I tore it open There in my hands Only ash remained

The castle fell Now you are gone No more rings the bell Now you are gone

I felt you breathing
As I fell asleep
When I reached out to touch you
No one was there
And the night was deep

The candle died Now you are gone For the flame was too bright Now you are gone

I saw you walking Only yesterday When I ran to catch you You disappeared And the street was gray

The castle fell Now you are gone No more rings the bell Now you are gone