

Think About Last Night

Tim O'Brien

Think about last night, think about the choices you made
Everything you have, you tried to throw it all away
And your reckless life, left you on the street alone last night
Think about last night

Think about today, think about the way you feel
See through the haze, how you and the devil made a deal
But you can walk away, you can turn your back on him today
It's the only way

Think about the morning and the sunshine comin' down
Do you face another new day or do you try to beat it down
Like you did last night?

Think about your friends and all the love they have for you
They're reachin' out, there only so much that they can do
Without your help, it's up to you in the end
Think about your friends

Think of this disease, the one that leaves your soul in shreds
And how it takes control, it eats through your body till your dead
It doesn't give a damn, it'll force you down onto your knees
Think of that disease

If you cut your hand, would you ignore the pain?
Would you let it bleed and let the blood flow down the drain?
Just ask yourself, would you let life go or take a stand
If you cut your hand?

Think about the morning, the sunshine comin' down
Do you face another new day or do you try to beat it down
Like you did last night?

Think about last night, think about the choices you made
Everything you have, you tried to throw it all away
And your reckless life left you on the street alone last night
Think about last night
