White Sister

How can you say you love me When you don't even love yourself You live your life like a jagged knife Just waiting on the shelf How can you live for tomorrow When you curse the night and day The minutes pass through the hour glass As you let them slip away Do you love me White sister Do you love me when I play your game Do you love me White sister Do you love me When I call your name How can you touch the sorrow With a leather gloved hand When you summon the winds of anger Just as fast as you can You crucify an orphan With the rainbow in your eyes Then you send out invitations And address them with his cries I, I don't even know what's right I can say that you put up some kind of fight I've been branded I've been stranded I'm so thankful for what I've been handed I wish I could say that you're mine Such a card game Do you love me White sister Do you love me when I play your game Do you love me White sister Do you love me When I call your name
