Daughter Of Grace

Twila Paris

She went down so low, thought she?d Never ever find the surface again Went so far astray thought she?d Never find her way back home

Hated to think about the past almost as much as She hated to think about the future She sat down inside to wait, to rest her mind a while No use trying to fight with fate or fake a smile

There she found the end of herself Heard a small voice crying for help and she was

Carried in the arms of love and mercy Breathing in a second wind Shining with the light of each new morning Looking into hope again

Unable to take another step Finally ready to begin Born for a second time in a brand new place Daughter of grace

She spent half her life working hard to be someone you had to admire Met the expectations and added something of her own So proud of all that she had done

Where was the glory so proud at all she had not done 'Til she knelt beneath a wall that will could never scale Broken and discovering that she could fail

There she found the end of herself Heard her own voice crying for help and she was

Carried in the arms of love and mercy Breathing in a second wind Shining with the light of each new morning Looking into hope again

Unable to take another step Finally ready to begin Born for a second time in a brand new place Daughter of grace

Grace is there for everyone Grace is always free We must all depend on grace Especially me, especially me, I have been

Carried in the arms of love and mercy Breathing in a second wind Shining with the light of each new morning Looking into hope again

Unable to take another step

Finally ready to begin Born for a second time in a brand new place Daughter of grace
