The day is the wife whom I elude
The one to whom I should be right
Although forewarned by peers and kin
I always get into the night
Mother always warned me such
Being a nocturnal soul
Besides just being simply strange
Spawns from some illness of the mind

'Cause the night, she calls me She calls me She calls me She calls me

She sways in her velvet dress
And pulls me towards her in the dark
While the others rest
While the others rest
While the others rest

Heed the call the time has come For all you children of the night Gather 'round like suckling dogs Mother's come, she is the night Come with me to the other side Make the girl in black your bride

'Cause the night, she calls me She calls me She calls me She calls me

She sways in her velvet dress
And pulls me towards her in the dark
While the others rest
While the others rest
While the others rest

It just seems very strange to me That her quiet lonely streets And draped in all her mystery Could be so sweet and comforting

'Cause the night, she calls me She calls me She calls me She calls me

She sways in her velvet dress
And pulls me towards her in the dark
While the others rest
While the others rest
While the others rest
