

A Wizard's War

Winterstorm

Far from the land where the sunrise is born I am walking in my dreams to find the infant child still left all alone I realize the war begins when it is too late and neither steel nor stone can stop the dawning of my fate
They struck me down with a touch of the blade
I was caught on hostile ground there was no shelter from their everlasting hate My armour smashed to pieces now, my soul was torn apart the question that remained: Could I have seen this from the start?
All on my own I'm fighting a wizard's war
I close my eyes to escape from reality
I never have shown that I'm fighting a wizard's war for the existence of faith and of purity it's a wizard's war for me
I realize the war begins when it is too late
and neither steel nor stone can stop the dawning of my
fate
My armour smashed to pieces now, my soul was torn
apart
the question that remained: Could I have seen this from the start?
They struck me down with a touch of the blade
I was caught on hostile ground
there was no shelter from their everlasting hate My armour smashed to pieces now, my soul was torn
apart
the question that remained: Could I have seen this from the start?
Still in my eyes see the thundering rage you will never bring me down though on my knees I will be crawling back in place.
A power greater than your hate, the strength to carry on to rise again in all my pride, my victory has come All on my own I'm fighting a wizard's war
I close my eyes to escape from reality
I never have shown that I'm fighting a wizard's war
for the existence of faith and of purity
it's a wizard's war for me